

U.S. will refuse arms sale to Iran

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig said Wednesday the United States will refuse to sell military supplies to Iran and will not turn over equipment the Tehran government already has purchased.

Making clear the Reagan administration will continue to view Iran with great suspicion, Haig also said American businesses should use the "most careful caution" in future trade with Iran.

Haig indicated the United States will abide by the terms of the agreements that freed the 52 American hostages, although he said U.S. officials will want to be sure the Iranians are living up to their obligations under the agreement as well.

"The United States government will fulfill its obligations in accordance with both international law and the accepted norms of domestic legal practice," Haig said at his first news conference as secretary of state.

He cleared up one loose end not specifically covered in the agreements, which was the disposition of nearly $500 million in military equipment purchased but not shipped by the time the hostages were seized on Nov. 4, 1979. Then-President Jimmy Carter halted further shipments of the equipment in retaliation for the hostage seizure.

"Let me state categorically today there will be no military equipment provided to the government of Iran, either under earlier obligations and contractual arrangements, or as yet unstated requests," Haig said.

The Defense Department reported that Iran has paid for about $457 million worth of U.S. military equipment that was not delivered. Most of the gear is spare parts, U.S. built jet fighters, tanks, helicopters and other weapons sold to Iran before the overthrow of the late Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

The revolutionary regime in control in Iran has not requested shipment of the equipment, and the subject was not raised in the long negotiations leading to the hostage release agreements, officials have said previously.

Haig said the United States might sell the equipment elsewhere and turn over the cash value of the equipment to Iran.

Haig also said the administration had high on its priority list concern about the extent of Soviet involvement in training, funding and equipping international terrorists.

"I think it is clear we have been witness to an unprecedented, at least in character and scope, risk-taking on the part of the Soviet Union — not only in this hemisphere but in Africa as well," Haig said.

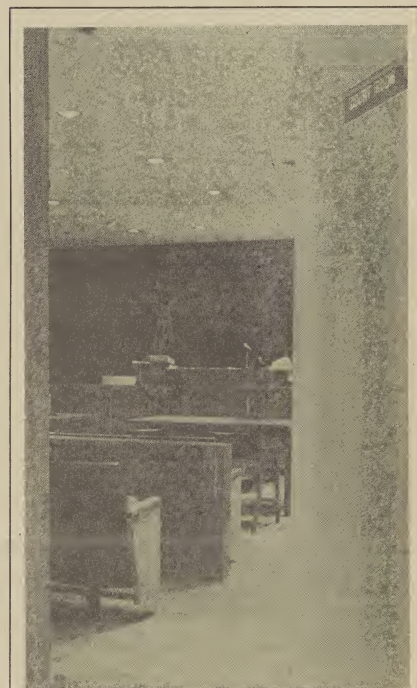

He said under President Reagan "international terrorism will take the place of human rights in our concern because it is the ultimate abuse of human rights."

Haig added: "It is time it be addressed with greater clarity and effectiveness by Western nations and by the United States."

The freed hostages started returning to their hometowns Wednesday, to the friendliness and familiarity of small-town America and to the people they grew up with. There were miles of yellow ribbons, hundreds of "Welcome" signs and even some apple pie from neighbors.

The returnees — almost two dozen of whom will go to New York for a ticker tape parade on Friday — got the same kind of joyful, tumultuous greetings in their hometowns that they have gotten everywhere since their release from Iran eight days ago — from Weisbaden to West Point, Washington. But on Wednesday, there was a difference. The cheers were from the people they knew, the people who rang church bells for them, wrote letters to them and suffered with them through 444 days of captivity.

It may be some time before camera coverage of the 8th Circuit Court, or any Utah court, is permitted, according to a Utah Bar official. The U.S. Supreme Court, however, ruled Monday criminal trials may be broadcast and covered by still photography.

TV court coverage in Utah must wait

By JERRY PAINTER
Universe Weekend Editor

It could be a long wait before television or still-photography coverage of criminal trials is allowed in Utah courtrooms, even after the U.S. Supreme Court ruled Monday states are free to permit the coverage, a Utah Bar official said this week.

The court ruled in a Florida case that broadcast and photographic coverage does not automatically interfere with a defendant's right to a fair trial.

More than half the states have decided, on either a permanent or an experimental basis, to allow some camera and microphone coverage of court proceedings. Utah is not one of them. Some of these states do not allow coverage over a defendant's objection.

Paul Tinker, Utah's chief deputy attorney general, said he doesn't expect Utah courts to change their position in the near future. Tinker said the attorney general's office is taking no position and "leaving it for the courts to decide."

"Utah is a fairly conservative state and has held its position for some time," Tinker said. "There are good arguments on both sides. I think it depends on the case."

Tinker said in particularly gruesome criminal cases camera coverage in the courtroom would only serve to dramatize and work against the judicial process.

Tinker said allowing cameras in the courtroom was tried in Utah last May by Judge Venoy Christofferson. The experiment involved a kidnapping trial in Box Elder County's 1st District Court. Soon after, Christofferson was ordered by Utah's Supreme Court to stop the experiment.

"I favor it," said Utah Bar Association president Carman Kipp concerning cameras in the courtroom. "It would help inform people, give better information on how the judicial system works and help the judicial process."

Kipp said because of opposition the change could be slow in coming and many Utah judges see cameras in the courtroom as having some serious drawbacks. He said finding the problems could only be done by experimenting.

"Everybody's a ham," he said. "When you get people in front of a camera they act a little differently. I have some reservations about whether or not it would affect the candor of the courtroom."

In April 1979, the Society of Professional Journalists — Sigma Delta Chi (SDX), filed a petition in Utah Supreme Court requesting a modification of current canons to allow still photography and TV cameras on a one-year experimental basis.

SDX lawyer Randy Dryer said the recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling lends hope for a positive ruling on the petition to Utah's high court.

Dryer said he believes the ruling has taken so long in coming because judges have strong pro and con views concerning cameras in the courtroom and Utah's justices were waiting for a Supreme Court ruling before making their own decision.

Kipp said the Utah Bar planned to recommend to Utah's court that a pilot program be set up, but the program was "put on the shelf" until a ruling was made on the SDX petition.

"Dead Man's Canyon," a painting by Peter Hurd, works have disappeared from the BYU Art Museum has been missing since 1977. More than 50 Art Collection.

Paintings missing

By SHANNON STARKS
Universe Staff Writer

A valuable Peter Hurd painting is missing from the BYU Art Museum collection, said Wesley Burnside, director of the Art Acquisitions committee.

The whereabouts of the painting, titled "Dead Man's Canyon," were first recorded in 1977. The painting is located in room F-233 HFAC, which was then a faculty office and now a music practice room.

Burnside said no department has been able to identify the person who occupied the room when the painting was checked out.

More than 50 other works are also unaccounted for. Most are not valuable, Burnside said, but two important paintings, a Whit-edge painting of a fisherman and a Thomas Hill painting of tepees, were missing since 1978.

Faculty check-out

Prior to a year ago, a faculty or staff member could check out a valuable painting, said Richard Hillgass, registrar of the collection. The painting was assigned to a room number, which was recorded along with the extension of the office, he said. No names were recorded.

The Art Acquisitions Committee kept track of all the checked-out paintings by authorizing a complete campus search each year, Hillgass said. Students were hired through student employment to check every room on campus and record new locations of paintings.

On the back of each painting is a label that reads: "Please do not move this painting from this room." In spite of this request, professors or movers have taken the paintings along when they have moved to new offices, said Hillgass.

Hillgass said many paintings are misplaced when the moving department is told to move all a professor's belongings to his new office. The paintings are moved as well.

He said finding a misplaced painting is like trying to find a misplaced book in the library; it could take years to look through the entire collection.

Hillgass said a major cause of the problem is the lack of budget and staff to maintain and keep records of the collection. The gallery director was expected to maintain between 15 thousand and 20 thousand art works, plan and run as many as four exhibitions a month, and keep records as well.

"It's not humanly possible," said Hillgass. "It just isn't possible — which is why things have just slowly gotten out of control."

New director

After Burnside became the new gallery director in 1978, he halted the lending of paintings because of losses.

Since 1978 the gallery has had the services of a conservator of fine arts and a registrar to help the director, but there is no budget for the museum collection.

"We've been granted a small amount of money with which to bring all the cataloging up to date," said Hillgass. "This does not mean once the money is exhausted it will be replaced. We'll all be looking for new jobs."

But he said he was happy about the money received so far because it is more than has ever been allotted the collection.

Hillgass said work is being done to authenticate BYU's collection and to complete genealogies and appraisals for the paintings. He feels BYU has the finest collection in Utah. Many of BYU's paintings have appeared in books and local and national exhibitions.

He said most people do not realize how much the collection is worth. Most of the paintings are kept locked up in storage because the security is tight and the environment is controlled.

The museum collection is insured by private firms for $8 million, Hillgass said.

He hopes to be able to gradually put the paintings in the library, which also has tight security and environmental control. He said great art should be displayed so people can enjoy it.

Anyone having any information about the missing paintings should contact Wesley Burnside at ext. 6204.

Residents warned against sales push

By JAN TAYLOR
Universe Staff Writer

A door-to-door magazine sales company, Mecca Enterprises, Inc., may be recruiting local residents to sell magazine subscriptions, which usually are not bargains, according to Jay Bush.

Bush, chief executive officer of Utah Valley Better Business Bureau, said the subscriptions are not legitimate magazines, but often are not bargains because they are sold at newspaper prices that are not at newspaper prices they are sold at. According to a report released in December by the Council of Better Business Bureaus, Mecca is a clearing house based in Arlington, Texas, which processes orders received from five publishing companies. These orders are then submitted to magazine publishers.

Several BBBs throughout the country have received complaints in Mecca and the companies it is involved with, the report said. The number and type of complaints vary from company to company, but generally accuse Mecca of not delivering or delaying delivery of magazines ordered from the publishers, sales techniques employed by salesmen and cancellation and refunding problems.

"They (Mecca Enterprises) are the worst of the worst," Bush said.

Doug Hensley, crew manager for nationwide Publications, one company associated with Mecca, said our company has never had anything (complaints) that I know of that the company has not taken care of."

Hensley said his company sells subscriptions for about 37 different publications. He said business practices vary from manager to manager, but that he would guarantee anybody with complaints would be taken care of.

Hensley said he did not think any complaints that had not been taken care of could be documented.

According to Bush, the salesmen involved in door-to-door magazine sales may make as much as $250-$500 per week.

"They will sell an average of 100 subscriptions per day at an average of $30 each," he said. "This is money that could be spent locally."

Bush said stopping most door-to-door magazine sales practices helps protect the consumer and aids local businessmen by keeping money flowing within the community.

Consumers should check with the BBB before buying anything from door-to-door salesmen, he said.

Reagan decontrols oil

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan abolished the last federal controls on oil prices Wednesday in the hope that higher costs for consumers will force more conservation in homes and spur increased production by the industry.

As a result, motorists may pay 3 to 5 cents more a gallon for gasoline in the days ahead, said Energy Secretary James B. Edwards. Consumer groups said the increase could be as much as 12 cents a gallon.

Edwards said the impact on home heating oil prices would be minimal. If there were any at all. Energy Action, a consumer group, said heating oil prices could jump by more than 10 cents a gallon in February.

Edwards, a dentist by profession, readily admitted he did not know the full impact of Reagan's order and, at one point, said he was "a little confused" about some of the details.

"We did it because the president promised it in the campaign," Edwards said. "We think it's good for America, and we have certainly studied (it) to some extent. I'm the new guy on the block and I must admit I don't have all the statistical data at my fingertips that you may desire."

He said, for example, he did not know how much the industry might reap additional profits, or how many additional barrels of oil might be produced as a result.

Reagan, in a statement, said, "Ending price controls is the positive first step towards a balanced energy program — a program free of arbitrary and counterproductive constraints — one designed to promote prudent conservation and vigorous domestic production."

The president said controls had held U.S. production "below its potential, artificially boosted energy consumption, aggravated our balance of payments problems and stifled technological breakthroughs."

"Price controls have also made us more energy-dependent on the OPEC nations — a development that has jeopardized our economic security and undermined price stability at home," Reagan added.

At a White House briefing where the action was announced, Edwards said the federal government may reap an additional $3 billion to $4 billion annually from taxes, under the "windfall profits" tax on industry, stemming from increased production. Until told otherwise, Edwards did not know the estimate was an annual figure rather than a one-time, overall gain.

Reagan's order revoked price and allocation controls on crude oil, gasoline and propane — the only petroleum products remaining under controls.

The controls were being phased out and were set to expire on Sept. 30. They were first imposed in 1971 under the wage-price freeze of the Nixon administration and then were locked into law in 1973.

In 1979 then-President Jimmy Carter started a gradual decontrol program that would have eliminated all controls over the next eight months. Reagan's order accelerates that process so the last controls are lifted immediately.

Musical Notes

by Leland Lee Wakefield

In the nineteenth century, women of the upper classes were trained in the fine arts and were often called upon to exhibit their skills for company. Few young women of the time were considered accomplished if they could not play a musical instrument. As a result, all took lessons. When evening gatherings got dull, they would bring out their instruments and entertain families and guests. Often, many members of the family would play together. Unfortunately, family musical nights are a dying institution.

Start your own family tradition — a family music night — with a Baldwin piano or organ. The choice is yours and the enjoyment it will bring. Visit us at WAKEFIELD'S INC. at 78 North University Avenue, or call 373-1263, Mon.-Sat. 10-4. We are your authorized Baldwin dealer and the largest volume dealer in Provo and the area. See us for a complete line of Baldwin pianos and organs including the Baldwin FunMachine. This organ is easy to play and so versatile even without lessons you can be making music the first time you sit down to play. See us too for accessories like organ and piano lamps and a very extensive sheet music department. Whatever your family's preference you'll find we have something you'll like or we will special order it for you.

MUSIC TIP:

It is easy to tape your own music and then play it back to hear the errors.

Since 1972, Arrington has worked to make the vast amounts of information about Brigham Young available to scholars.

There is a more complete record of Brigham Young than any other American of that period, because everything he said and did was recorded, Arrington said. No apparent attempt has been made to censor the records. "It's essentially a complete collection of everything that was made," Arrington said.

His recent assignment to write a one-volume book on Brigham Young for the church is one of the most difficult tasks he has undertaken because of the vast amount of information available, Arrington said. "It would be far easier, far simpler to write six books about Brigham Young," he said.

Arrington hopes people will "love Brigham Young all the more" by reading about defects and problems he had. "He had weaknesses as well as strengths. He had failures as well as triumphs," Arrington said.

The often-asked question of how many wives Brigham Young had is "not very easy to give because it depends on what you mean by a wife," Arrington said. Brigham Young was sealed to 50 women, some of whom he never saw and others without his approval, Arrington said.

"He was a person who was loved by his people and loved most by those who knew him best," Arrington said.

Life crises confab slated for Salt Lake

BYU is hosting the second annual Life Crises Conference today and Friday at the Salt Palace in Salt Lake City, according to Ralph A. Rowley, coordinator for scientific conferences and workshops.

The conference is scheduled to include a large range of topics such as depression, death and dying, suicide and self-destructive behavior, adolescent crises, drug and alcohol misuse, rape and assault, burnout in the helping professions, mid-life crises, self-esteem and self-enhancement.

"Material covered will be of most interest to the professional person involved with counseling," said Rowley.

Dr. Brent Hafen, professor of health sciences, said the conference was aimed at the professional who had to deal with other people and the problems they faced.

"The lay person may discover some interesting insights on a problem," he said, "but this conference is not meant to take the place of professional counseling."

"This year we are dealing with a variety of problems that might crop up," said Hafen, "but next year we might specialize in one main area again."

Registration costs $95 and one credit hour can be obtained for an additional $15.

Beginning sign language offered

Students can learn how to communicate with deaf people by taking a beginning sign language class being offered this semester. The class is being taught by Tom Osmond and Mark Jacobus.

Last year 59 people took the class and "we have doubled the number of classes this year," said Ron Hills, a spokesman for the department of conferences and workshops, which is sponsoring the classes.

The intermediate sign language classes, taught by Rod and Carol Voris, stress building a larger vocabulary, developing greater fluency and introducing interpreter skills.

The classes began Tuesday and anyone who wishes to register may do so by going to the department of conferences and workshops in 242 HRCB. Registration will be on a space-available basis only. Tuition is $28.

Careful money management helps marriage, says professor

By DEBBIE GIUNTA
Universe Staff Writer

Students who leave BYU with a naive outlook on marriage and economic responsibility will be in for a shock in the "real world," according to Robert F. Bohn, associate professor of business management.

Bohn spoke Wednesday in the Varsity Theater as part of Consumer Affairs Week. Addressing the topic, "Money, marriage, and making it," he advised students to live "a step beyond chalkboard church membership."

He used the analogy of a football player, who watches every play his coach illustrates on a chalkboard result in a touchdown, to describe young LDS people who keep the commandments and live right, everything will automatically work out for the best.

"Chalkboard encouragement is important," Bohn said, "but it needs to be put in perspective." The person who lives solely by such idealism is setting himself up for disappointment and failure, Bohn said.

He also expressed his concern that many people leave the LDS Church because they become cynical after they experience the "outside" world.

"Even if you play by the rules, you're still going to get burned," Bohn said. "The important thing is how you react to it. You can become angry, or you can bounce back and grow from the experience."

Bohn pointed out that the Lord sometimes deals ambiguously with people. Blessings and punishments are not always pronounced immediately, and therefore life doesn't always seem fair, he said.

Revelation should dictate birth control

By HOLLY HICKS
Universe Staff Writer

There are many voices in the world advocating birth control, but as members of the LDS Church must rely only on personal revelation in making decisions on how many and when to bring children into the world, according to H.E. "Add" Scruggs.

was voicing his opinion Tuesday in the ASBYU forum of student thought.

In the well-attended lecture, Scruggs named four different voices which justify some type of birth control: hedonism, medicine, the social sciences and personal revelation.

Calling hedonism "the loudest voice competing for our attention," Scruggs condemned the selfishness of the world which says, "Children should be had only if they will provide more pleasure than the boats, cars, homes and freedoms that one must sacrifice to parent them."

"How sad it is that so many have not learned the simple lesson that hollow lives propped up by worldly possessions are hollow still," Scruggs said.

According to Scruggs, medical advice plays an important part in determining how many children to have or whether to have children at all.

"The brethren have been careful to emphasize that those who are not 'in possession of health and vigor' should take great care in considering pregnancy," Scruggs said.

He said the spirit of all counsel he was acquainted with is that the health of the mother and unborn child are of paramount importance, yet medical advice should not be put above personal revelation.

"Is medical advice so beyond question that it should go unverified by the Creator of the body the doctor said cannot take the strain?" he asked.

Scruggs said it was from the third voice, that of the social sciences, whence comes the paranoia of overpopulation and the contradictory theories concerning the spacing and rearing of children.

The fourth voice is personal revelation. "Its purpose," Scruggs said, "is not to dictate, but to ratify."

Confirmation can come on the decision to bring another child into the world or to postpone having children.

"Those too lazy to seek his counsel on this most important matter risk offending God, on one hand by refusing to prepare tabernacles for spirits he wishes to send to worthy homes, and angering him on the other by having children as animal passion would dictate, and regretting, resenting and neglecting his precious spirits as a result."

Scruggs said several widely accepted beliefs in the LDS culture have no basis. "It is generally accepted," he said, "that before using birth control one should have revelation."

"At the same time, I say before having another child one should have revelation," he said.

"We enjoy cut and dried answers, but personal revelation is the bottom line," Scruggs said.

Grant given for smoking, alcohol study

A $26,553 grant has been awarded a BYU professor for research designed to measure the damage a mother's drinking and smoking, together, have on unborn children.

Dr. Robert E. Seegmiller, associate professor of zoology, received the money from the Thrasher Research Fund, Salt Lake City.

The two-year project will deal with determining the extent alcohol and cigarette use during the unborn when the two substances are used together.

Seegmiller will use mice in his research and then use the data to predict what will happen to humans under similar situations.

The mice will be exposed to various levels of cigarette smoke and alcohol, proportional to dosages humans would receive.

The significant contribution of Seegmiller's research is that it measures the effect on offspring of drinking and smoking when done together. In comparison, other projects have measured the damage drinking and smoking, taken alone, have on offspring.

Security begins charging bikers impounding fee

Beginning Sunday, BYU Security will start to charge a $5 impounding fee for bicycles found in unauthorized locations, said Sgt. Paul Bringham, head of the traffic division.

"Up to now we haven't been charging students when their bikes were impounded," said Bringham, "but last year we had to auction 135 bicycles because nobody claimed them."

Bicycles have to be kept for 90 days before security can auction them, but sometimes owners cannot be found.

"We encourage students to license their bicycles," said Bringham, "Then, if we find it somewhere we can easily contact the owner."

A bicycle license costs $3 and is available from BYU Security Traffic Division.

"We find bicycles in all sorts of places, chained to stairs, outside buildings, everywhere. We even find some abandoned. The only authorized place for them is properly locked to a bicycle rack," said Bringham.

"This summer we located bicycle racks in all the problem areas, but we welcome further suggestions from students," he said.

Cougars relive bowl win

BYU football fans may have given up hope and walked out of the stadium disheartened during the final minutes of last month's Holiday Heartstopper, but 8,000 repentant Cougar aficionados showed up to relive BYU's version of the "Immaculate Reception" Wednesday night — and not a single person left early.

The Marriott Center crowd gave the team members a standing ovation as they were introduced. They then proceeded to go crazy as they celebrated the closing 30 seconds of the 1980 Holiday Bowl — many for the first time.

BYU President Jeff Holland, Provo Mayor

James E. Ferguson and Elder Paul H. Dunn, of the LDS Quorum of Seventy, gathered to praise the Holiday Bowl victors.

WAC Commissioner Joe Kearney presented gridders the WAC championship trophy and Vinnie Vincent, of the Holiday Bowl Committee, awarded them the Holiday Bowl winner's trophy.

A special award, in honor of the last-second Jim McMahon-Clay Brown connection, was given to the team by K-96 radio. It was called simply the "Look, you guys, I'm going to rear back and throw it as far as I can and one of you guys catch it" award.

Wrestling tourney set

BYU will host the Mountain Intercollegiate Wrestling Association (MIWA) Tournament for the first time in the tournament's 19-year history Friday and Saturday in the Smith Fieldhouse.

No team will run away with the competition, according to BYU wrestling coach Fred Davis.

"Most of the entered teams have well-balanced attacks," he said. "That means anyone can win."

Five collegiate conferences will be represented by the 15 schools entered in the competition.

"Boise State, Northern Colorado and Utah State are likely to be the tough teams," said Davis.

Davis said the Cougars will have several possible seeds for the tournament including Chris Taylor (118), Ed Snook (126), Billy Boyd (167), Jeff Needs (177) and Larry Hamilton (Hwt.).

The first two rounds of the tournament begin Friday at 1 p.m. The championship semifinals and final round consolation will begin at 7:30 p.m.

Consolation matches will be held at 1 p.m. and 7 p.m. on Saturday with the championship matches held that night at 7:30 p.m. Admission of $1 for BYU students with activity cards and $2 for adults will be charged for the evening matches.

Y swimmers to compete in tourney

The BYU swim teams will get their first look at San Diego State, New Mexico and the Air Force Academy at this weekend's Albuquerque Invitational.

The importance of the meet rests in the fact that the Cougars will face all three teams later in the year in WAC and regional championships.

"We are looking forward to meeting some of the teams that will mean something," said Coach Tim Powers.

Powers describes all three of the upcoming opponents as having some "excellent people" in each event, but no "power" behind those people. "We too have excellent swimmers in all the events," added Powers.

"We will be looking for more consistency this weekend," Powers said. "We've shifted gears since the meets this last weekend and are driving a little harder now. We will be looking forward to some faster times from our swimmers."

The BYU swimmers should come back from this weekend's trip with some added experience, faster times and three more dual victories.

The women's meet scheduled today with University of Utah has been cancelled.

Symphony charms BYU

By DONNA IKEGAMI
and MARA CALLISTER
Entertainment Editor and Assistant Editor

Conductor Varujan Kojian showed his BYU audience disciplined elegance at his Provo debut with the Utah Symphony Wednesday evening.

From the response at the ticket booth and from the audience, the orchestra could easily have sold out the deJong Concert Hall another night.

Maestro Kojian commands his musicians with grace and precision. The orchestra masterfully performed the Symphony No. 1 by Ludwig von Beethoven. The logical quality of the score was interpreted sensitively. Although not as famous as the Beethoven's fifth symphony, the light tone of the music proved quite exhilarating. Hearing the Symphony No. 2 by Jean Sibelius brought the pageantry of a royal court to mind. The majestic tones were interrupted by moments of excitement, as well as times when the tuba broke in with alarm clock monotony.

The larger segment of the musicians is made up of members under 40 years old. It's heartening that the younger generation is both interested in and qualified to play in a symphony that has been ranked among the top twelve in the nation by Fortune magazine. The audience enjoyed seeing nearly a dozen BYU alumni and faculty members playing in the orchestra.

One thing marred the performance — the applause. The conductor, although trying to be gracious, did not want to acknowledge the applause in what should have been quiet moments between movements of the symphonies. Towards the end of the Sibelius symphony, the culprit in the audience caught on to concert etiquette.

Symphony co-sponsor, Mountain Bell, with some slick public relations work, presented Kojian with a sterling silver baton immediately following the performance. The concert-goers obviously supported the symphony by crowding the reception room.

Mechanical bull, horror movie, scheduled for Friday Nite Live

A mechanical bull, movies, refreshments and smaller crowds should all be a part of this semester's Friday Nite Live, according to Bill Winfield, ASBYU Organizations Office vice president.

The Wilkinson Center will come alive Friday at 6:30 p.m., Winfield said, and activities will continue until 2 a.m.

Winfield said the event was so popular last semester that people had a hard time finding standing room. He added that he feels the excessive crowds limited the event's financial success.

Ex-POW to speak on war experiences

A brigadier general who spent seven years as a prisoner of war during the Vietnamese conflict, will speak today at 2 p.m. in the Varsity Theater, ELWC.

Brig. Gen. Robinson Risner will speak about his POW experiences. During the Korean War, Risner shot down eight enemy jet fighters. In the Vietnam War, his plane was shot down twice by enemy ground fire. He was captured and held

"We expect this Friday Nite Live to be a better money-making project than last time," Winfield said. The Wilkinson Center was so packed last semester, he explained, that many people simply walked by the booths.

Winfield said a new attraction this semester will be a mechanical bull the one used in the movie, "Urban Cowboy."

"We are encouraging people to come in cowboy attire," he said. "What's Up Doc" and "Psycho" head the list of movies to be shown, along with some Marx brothers and Bruce Lee films.

Drug shops infest Camelot

Law enforcement officers in Utah are handicapped enough in their battle to control narcotics traffic without having to put up with a lucrative industry in our midst that legally condones, advertises and encourages drug abuse. Yet, that's the kind of law the people of this state live under right now.

Under current statutes, all kinds of drug paraphernalia and literature are legally sold in the so-called "head shops" that flourish in most population centers throughout the state, including Orem. The popularity of these questionable businesses can be traced to various drug subcultures that have taken root, and are now festering and spreading their venom, rebellion and misery through all levels of society — yes, even right here in Mormon Camelot.

We agree with Orem narcotics officer Pete Hansen when he says drug paraphernalia serves as a "catalyst" in encouraging drug abuse, particularly among many impressionable teenagers who tend to look upon the marijuana leaf as a status symbol. As it is right now, both adults and teenagers in Utah Valley can go to one of several "head shops" in this region and buy cocaine measuring spoons and snorting tubes, marijuana pipes and bongs, roach clips, literature on "recreational drugs" and a wide variety of other drug-related accessories, each specifically designed to either use or encourage the use of an illegal drug.

We believe such paraphernalia should be outlawed in Utah and in every other state in the nation. A bill banning these drug devices, which in effect would eliminate "head shops," is currently being debated in the Utah Legislature. The sponsor, Sen. Fred Eklund, R-Murray, says the measure would by no means do away with drug paraphernalia, but it would give law enforcement officers another weapon in their seemingly endless and difficult battle to control illicit drugs.

Utah's anti-paraphernalia bill is patterned after model legislation drafted by the Federal Drug Enforcement Agency. Similar laws already have been passed by other states, including New York.

This law would also prohibit magazines and newspapers from advertising drug paraphernalia in Utah, thus making such questionable journalistic endeavors as "High Times" and the local "Deseret Reefer" against the law.

We trust our lawmakers will quickly pass this legislation and thereby do away with what one police officer called the state's "jackass position" on drug paraphernalia. He is, of course, referring to that double standard where we, the people, make narcotics illegal on one hand, but on the other condone the sale of devices needed to use and abuse them.

Y's student-athletes maintain academic picture not so bleak

Jerry Painter's series of stories in The Daily Universe on athletics and academics was not only severely slanted, but also replete with innuendos, poor logic and half-truths.

Painter said BYU Institutional Research and Planning showed 56 percent of incoming freshmen graduate, compared to 75 percent of senior football players who graduated. If this is indeed the case, it would appear that 75 percent is excellent. Painter has told only one side of the story. There is another perspective. He quoted Jeff Blanc as saying, "... The athletic department did me an injustice because they did not put their foot down hard enough; they should have put their foot to my butt and got me going." According to Garth Hall, academic adviser for the football team, they did indeed put their foot to Blanc's "butt" every semester and begged him to go to school, but to no avail.

Painter seems to paint a bleak picture concerning the academics, but gives no comparative figures. Institutional research bears out the fact that the undergraduate student population at BYU has a Grade Point Average of 2.8. The GPA of the total football team is 2.7, a minimal difference.

Painter indicated that 25 percent of the senior football players fail to graduate. Because of tremendous demand on time, most players attend school one more year after their senior year. They take five years to graduate.

He mentioned that players like Tod Thompson, Tom Bell, Alan Taylor and Scott Runia did not graduate. This is misleading. Thompson is currently attending graduate school in Los Angeles; Bell, after taking over a family business temporarily, is back in school and will graduate in April. Taylor played professional basketball in Europe. The season is now over. He is back, and will graduate in the spring, as will Runia, when his European basketball schedule comes to an end. It would seem Painter is not telling the whole story.

Painter quoted All-WAC wide receiver Mike Chronister as saying 12 to 14 starters his senior year were in school solely for football and not for an education. Did Painter bother to get the names of those players and substantiate those accusations?

I started at the other wide receiver position that same year and would be astounded if even two players besides Mike shared his views.

The facts are: 15 have already graduated and only three did not, while four are still in school. Something here seems to be wrong! Sure, there are those student-athletes at BYU mainly for sports. There are those students at BYU mainly for marriage. Both need help. But for every Jeff Blanc or Mike Chronister, there are several like Scott Phillips, pre-law, Dan Platter pre-med; or Jeff Nison, master's in accounting.

Methods unethical

Editing adds TV bias

What viewers eventually see and hear on television news is usually only what television editors want viewers to see. Through editing effects, television news reporting seems to have become editorializing instead of the reporting function inherent in the term "news."

The editing of written material and the editing of television footage appear to be two very different matters. But filming is as subjective as selecting words. By merely aiming the camera, a photographer performs an editorial function. And carefully spliced footage can successfully twist an intended "news" report to be something less than completely factual.

The pictures of the Iran hostage crisis sent to U.S. homes by television is one example of an editing effect. Early in the hostage situation there were daily demonstrations outside the U.S. Embassy in Tehran. Television viewers, night after night, were led to believe, through television footage of the demonstrations, that the entire city was in turmoil. In reality, some reporters pointed out that only a few blocks from the embassy it was business as usual in Iran. In this case, the pictures themselves weren't distorted, but what viewers were allowed to see was.

The television news program "Sixty Minutes" relies extensively on the editing process. One comment strung to another can present a devastating story, and the viewer can rarely distinguish between objectivity and editing.

One of "Sixty Minutes'" first segments was a story about the Franklin Mint. The report led viewers to believe the Franklin Mint encourages and misleads customers into thinking collecting coins is a good financial investment. The segment includes less than two pages of script. The live script actually contained 20 pages and a direct quote from Franklin Mint president, Charles L. Andes, that "we do not recommend investing in the Franklin Mint products as a financial investment." Because of the editing "Sixty Minutes" had done, the report presented to the viewer was terribly slanted, if not entirely false.

According to Don Hewitt, executive producer of "Sixty Minutes," the editing decisions are one of the journalist's most valuable tools and should never be surrendered. Yet, while editing serves a useful function in presenting a concise story, when television editing distorts a report or account of a situation, as it appears "Sixty Minutes" did in the Franklin Mint and other instances, both credibility and ethics have surrendered to the scissors.

Maybe it's time for a "Sixty Minutes" of "Sixty Minutes."

Daniel Schorr, former CBS correspondent, now employed by the Cable News Network, suggests "the man with the scissors is the man with ultimate control."

What appears to be factual news reporting to the television viewer may really be a camouflage of visual editing because the televised image is only as accurate as the photographer or editor chooses it to be.

Those who seek news through the television medium must not overlook its powerful means to present more bias and editorializing than is found in the newspaper, as well as other written forms of mass communication.

To the editor

Y just can't win

Editor:
If BYU had accepted the kind donation of Anheuser Busch in behalf of Danny Ainge, Mr. Rector or someone else low enough for something to criticize would have most likely said that this school's administration was hypocritical anyway for accepting a gift made possible by the profits of alcohol consumption. You never can win BYU!

People shoot drugs

Editor:
In response to Msrs. Roberts & Thorne's response to your series on the sale of drug paraphernalia, I have this to say: Guns don't shoot bullets, people shoot bullets. Right?

Legal kidnapping

Editor:
In the Jan. 14 edition of The Universe, a student was quoted as saying that artificial insemination by a donor, not the husband, "sounds like artificial adultery." If that is so, then adoption of a child not your own sounds like legalized kidnapping.

It seems to me that a couple having a child that is at least half theirs, biologically speaking, is more desirable than having a child not all theirs, biologically. I'm not sure I would participate in surrogate parenting but we shouldn't be too quick to say no to those who are unable to naturally conceive a child.

Scalping farmers

Editor:
When a grocer buys produce from the farmer and resells it at a "profit" to the consumer, is that scalping? Aren't we completely willing to pay him for the convenience of not having to go out to the farms and negotiate personally for our produce? The grocer is in business because he provides a service which we are willing to pay for.

If a student has neither the time nor the proper life insurance to obtain "chicks" through current BYU policies should he not have the chance to buy them from someone who has taken the time and risk? Am I being "scalped" when I voluntarily pay a higher price for those tickets? I am being provided a service, and if the price is too high I will not buy it. As a result of the transactions we are both better off. Price only reveals the true demand for an item.

My point is that if we take our "scalpers" article literally, then gold should be selling at under $100 an ounce and a Van Gogh painting should cost under $1000 (the value of the paint, canvas, labor, etc.).

I too regret that profits, which could go to performers, are going to these "middlemen." The problem lies not with the scalpers, but with distribution policies. If people are willing to pay $20 for a prime seat, why not charge that price in the first place and eliminate the need for middlemen? This form of distribution has often been proposed under the name "Dutch Auction."

I'll give you two bucks for the back row!

Demands ridiculous

Editor:
It is a tragedy that Mr. Davidson's poor editorial echoed political idioms. How short-sighted for one to concur that we have not given ridiculous demands for hostages' release, and to further believe that we have done so without paying "one red cent."

Let us face reality! There are many companies that were in business with Iran. They lost millions of dollars due to lack of integrity. That is precisely the reason for the lawsuits. Also, those companies that exported to Iran trade sanctions placed on it. They lost money as well.

Now, for a lesson in economics. We will be paying for this because despite the tax deduction business losses, a business can survive from year to year on deductions. They will raise price cover losses over a period of time. That means that you and I will be paying more for various services may not be tomorrow, but it will happen shortly. President Reagan will not be able to save us immediately, if he is able to save all.

Don't look to arbitration by a national panel to make our case. Iran didn't listen to them before. Past dealings have shown that are not about to deal with integrity.

WORD POWER

The difference between the right word and the almost right word is the difference between lightning and the lightning bug.

Mark Twain

Often we hear, "Be there at 6 a.m. in the morning or 7 p.m. in the evening." Of course, "a.m. and p.m." refer to morning, evening, respectively. Also, "singularly unique" is redundant. The right usage is "very rare."
